

Weekly peace vigils continue

SALISBURY weekly peace vigils continue while the terrible carnage of Israel's war with Hamas and the devastation of Gaza go on.

The atrocities of the past can explain the atrocities of today, but they cannot justify them.

The extremes of suffering are plain to see and hear.

Now Israel has a genocide case to answer in the International Court of Justice.

The USA and the UK are implicated.

This violence will only cause more violence.

Attackers as well as victims are brutalised and traumatised for many years.

The talking will eventually have to happen.

There are peacemakers existing now in Israel and Palestine.

Talk now, before it is too late.

Spend money on relieving suffering, not on weapons and preventing humanitarian aid delivery.

Negotiate now - so that it takes less than the 300 years of conflict that it took in Northern Ireland, before peace prevails.

An international effort will be necessary, but it takes individuals to start it.

We live with hope and gather at the ceasefire vigil, reminding ourselves that we have more in common in our humanity than divides us, as we continue to campaign for a just solution.

The next vigils are at 5.15pm outside Salisbury Library on Saturday, February 17, and Saturday 24.
