WE REMEMBER

We remember the victims of all wars on all sides, the dead, the crippled, the refugees, and those left to grieve.

We remember the millions killed, many by weapons made in Britain, during the last 79 years of “peace”.

We remember that the same values which maintain Britain’s vast military budget also accept high unemployment, poor housing and the need for charity rather than effective public provisions for those in need.

We remember that life can be better than this, that wars are not accidental events or simply caused by “evil people”, that in fact they are the outcome of antagonistic attitudes and social, political and economic structures over which we have influence.

We vow to do all we can to abolish war.
